The luckiest woman

A. Violet Constant Jessop is considered to be one of the luckiest women in maritime history. She worked as an ocean liner stewardess which means that she had to serve food and drinks to passengers. This lucky woman survived two tragedies that happened on two ships: one when the Titanic sank in 1912 and the second, when the Britannic sank in 1916. What's more, Violet also had been on board the Olympic in 1911, when it almost sank after crashing into another ship.

B. Violet Jessop was born in the family of Irish emigrants in Argentina. Her father, William Jessop, emigrated from Dublin in the mid-1880s to farm sheep in Argentina. His fiancée, Katherine Kelly, followed him in 1886. They had nine children and Violet was the eldest. After her father's death, Violet and her family moved to Great Britain, where she attended a special school for girls. Soon her mother became ill and Violet had to leave school. To support her family Violet took a stewardess position with the Royal Mail Line aboard the ship the Orinoco.

C. At age 23, in 1911 Violet Jessop boarded the Olympic to work as a stewardess. The Olympic was a luxury ship that was the largest liner at that time. It was nearly 30 metres longer than any other ship. The Olympic's first major accident happened on 20 September, 1911, when she crashed into the old cruiser the Hawke near the Isle of Wight. Afterwards the Royal Navy blamed the Olympic for the incident and freed the ship the Hawke from any kind of blame.

D. Violet started working on the Titanic as a stewardess on 10 April, 1912. Four days later the Titanic struck an iceberg and sank. Violet was helping the passengers to board a lifeboat when an officer gave her a baby to take care of. Later a woman grabbed the baby Violet was holding and ran off with it without saying a word. The woman happened to be the baby's mother who thought she had lost the baby. She was so scared that didn't even thank Violet for saving her baby. The next morning Violet was rescued by the Carpathia.

E. Years after her retirement, Violet claimed to have received a telephone call from a woman who asked Violet if she saved a baby on the night when the Titanic sank. 'Yes,' Violet replied. The voice then said, 'I was that baby,' laughed and hung up. Her biographer John Maxtone-Graham said that maybe some children in the village were playing a joke on her. But Violet was sure that she had never told that story to anyone before.

F. The character of Violet Jessop is featured in a play Iceberg - Right Ahead! by Chris Burgess. The play was staged for the first time at the theatre called 'Upstairs at the Gatehouse in Highgate' in memory of those who sank with the Titanic. This play gives a dramatic account of the last twelve hours in the life of an 'unsinkable ship', from the calm afternoon of 14 April, 1912 to the rescue by the Carpathia on the morning of 15 April. Violet Jessop died of heart failure in 1971.

Task 4: Read the text and the questions which follow. For each question mark the correct answer (A, B, C or D). (8 points)

This is a true story of a young Brazilian boy, Irlan Silva, who fell in love with ballet at an early age.

At 23 I'm a lead dancer with Boston Ballet. But six years ago I wasn't sure whether I'd even live long enough to see my dream career in ballet come true. I grew up in a very poor neighbourhood on the outskirts of Rio de Janeiro where becoming a ballet dancer was something that people never thought about. This was and still is a very dangerous part of the city – a very frightening place with drugs, gangs and gunshots in the streets. It's a place without culture. The only culture for men there is football and drinking. So it was really frightening living there but the moment I became interested in ballet my world changed completely. I first discovered ballet at the age of 12, when my cousin invited me to join a dance class where the teacher was impressed with my dancing and suggested that I should join the ballet school in Rio. I immediately agreed and have never regretted it.

At first my parents were concerned about my decision because classical ballet is not seen as a suitable career for a boy, especially one from our neighbourhood. My father was really shocked when I first told him I wanted to do ballet and there was real trouble between us for a long time. But after my father saw me perform, he liked me so much that he completely changed his mind about this form of art. Now my father is my biggest fan together with my mum. For all the help I received, I'm very thankful to my teachers as well. They encouraged and supported me. As a result, I was very confident as a teenager and I was sure that I would reach my dream career.

I had to make a lot of sacrifices on my way to success – I had almost no social life, because I had to concentrate on my ballet so much. There were times when all my friends were going out at night or at the weekends. But I couldn't join them because I had to practise ballet. Well, it wasn't really easy but I think it was the price one must pay for ambition and success. In 2005 I won first place at New York's Grand Prix Ballet competition and Brazil's prestigious ballet competition and today here I am – a soloist at Boston Ballet - one of the world's most famous ballet companies. I am so incredibly happy I could get away from my violent neighbourhood to discover the beautiful world of ballet, which has completely transformed my life. I've always told people that you have to believe in your dreams and then they will happen. My dream has come true; I do feel free when I dance.
